BNBU Celebrates 20th Anniversary with Boston Centre Establishment and Institute for Advanced Study Breakthroughs

ZHUHAI, CHINA—Beijing Normal-Hong Kong Baptist University (BNBU) commemorates its two decades anniversary with two landmark achievements: the BNBU Boston Center and Institute for Advanced Study. These milestones underscore BNBU's commitment to global academic collaboration and cutting-edge research, solidifying its reputation as a leader in liberal arts education.

The establishment of Boston Center commits to BNBU's global academic cooperation. On Jan. 16, 2025, the BNBU Boston Center hosted the inauguration ceremony. The BNBU Boston Center consists of three institutions: the Research Institute for Life and Arts, the Center for Whitehead Studies and the BNBU Alumni Association of America. The center marks an important step for BNBU in facilitating interdisciplinary research and international education cooperation.

The Research Institute for Life and Arts aims to conduct interdisciplinary research from various perspectives, including medicine, humanities and arts. The Center for Whitehead Studies is committed to facilitating interdisciplinary research and collaboration on Whitehead's ideas and their applications. The BNBU Alumni Association of America seeks to build a bridge connecting BNBU and its alumni, providing more development opportunities for alumni in the United States.

During the inauguration ceremony, BNBU exchanged memorandums of cooperation with two prestigious American universities, Northeastern University and Brandeis University. This collaboration lays the foundation for future exchanges and cooperation in student projects, faculty visits and scientific research. The BNBU Boston Center's co-directorship is held by Eugene Wang, Rockefeller professor of Asian Art in the Department of History of Art and Architecture at Harvard University and the director of the Chinese Art Media Lab, further solidifying strategic ties between Harvard University and BNBU.

Regarding the founding of the center, Yu Yougen, counselor of the education section at the Chinese Consulate General in New York, stated: "The establishment of the BNBU Boston Center serves as a bridge between BNBU and the U.S. higher education community, promoting scientific research, talent development and comprehensive exchanges and cooperation among institutions." President Chen Zhi noted that Boston is a starting point, BNBU's global academic cooperation blueprint extends beyond Boston. Looking ahead, BNBU plans to establish additional centers in globally important cities such as Hong Kong, London and Sydney to expand its global influence and advance international collaboration.

Another important milestone is the establishment of the Institute of Advanced Study (IAS) on April 15, 2024. The IAS, led by renowned mathematician and academician Professor Tang Tao, is designed as a high-level platform integrating the expertise of global scholars and research teams from the Chinese Academy of Sciences and the Chinese Academy of Engineering. The institute will focus on artificial intelligence (AI), big data, scientific culture, and cross-disciplinary studies. At the same time, it will foster collaboration between BNBU's existing research strengths and partners across the Greater Bay Area and beyond. Notably, the IAS will drive projects such as AI-driven scientific discovery, cultural heritage digitization, and cross-border innovation ecosystems.

"By uniting scholars worldwide, we will turn scientific discoveries into engines for economic and cultural progress", said Tang Tao, director of the IAS, outlined ambitious goals: "We aim to build a globally competitive research hub, promoting interdisciplinary, cross-disciplinary cooperation, and research at the intersection of science and culture." The establishment of IAS is a testament to its role as a leader in shaping interdisciplinary education and pioneering the future of innovation.

To honor the 20th anniversary of BNBU, the university calls upon its global community—students, faculty, alumni, staff, parents, donors and supporters—to contribute to the commemorative book "My Story with BNBU". Submissions should be in narrative form, with a length of 2,000 to 3,000 words. Photos can be included. The submission deadline is March 31, 2025. Please send your contact details and manuscripts in both Word and PDF formats to: icscc@uic.edu.cn.

About BNBU

In a groundbreaking full-scale collaboration in higher education between the Chinese mainland and Hong Kong, Beijing Normal-Hong Kong Baptist University (BNBU) was established in 2005. Situated in Zhuhai City within the thriving Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area, BNBU stands as the first modern college in the Chinese mainland to champion a liberal arts education. BNBU is committed to enriching the higher education landscape and fostering students who possess professional acumen, whole-person development, a deep understanding of China and a global outlook.

Boston Center Backgrounder

The establishment of the Boston Center marks a key milestone in BNBU's globalization strategy. In recent years, BNBU has laid a strong foundation for the Boston Center through high-level visits, academic partnership expansion, and global talent recruitment.

High-Level Visits: Expanding Collaborative Opportunities

- Visited U.S. University in 2024 summer holiday
Professor Chen Zhi, president of BNBU, led a delegation to seven top-tier U.S. universities, focusing on student advancement pathways and interdisciplinary collaboration. During the visits, BNBU signed agreements for joint academic programs with institutions like Berklee College of Music and Emerson College.
- Strengthened Collaboration with UK Universities
Concurrently, Professor Pan Jianxin, vice president of BNBU, visited leading UK universities to promote faculty-student exchanges and research collaborations, supporting cross-regional initiatives for the Boston Center.

Global Partnership Network: Resource Platform for the Boston Center

Professor Zhou Yingqiang, executive vice president of BNBU, emphasized that the university's internationalization strategy centers on a global partnership network.

- 70+ Partner Institutions
Spanning 20 countries, including the University of Pennsylvania, Yale University, and Oxford University, this network provides extensive academic resources for the Boston Center.
- Student International Mobility
In the summer of 2024, nearly 450 students participated in 19 overseas programs—a 30% year-on-year increase. Semester-long exchange programs send about 20 students per term, while the Extended Study Program (ESP), developed with Hong Kong Baptist University, attracts global participation.
- International Student Community
Students from Germany, France, Italy, Japan, and other countries integrate into BNBU through degree programs, exchanges, and ESP, fostering a multicultural campus environment.

Talent and Research: Academic Engine of the Boston Center

- Global Faculty Expertise
100% of BNBU faculty members have international backgrounds, representing over 30 countries. Nine are listed among Stanford's Top 2% of Global Scientists.
- Research Focus Areas
Key fields include artificial intelligence, digitization of cultural heritage, and innovation ecosystems. These align with BNBU's IAS, driving cutting-edge projects like "AI for Science."

Institute for Advanced Study Backgrounder

The establishment of the IAS is a milestone in BNBU's efforts to advance cutting-edge research and promote scientific innovation. The institute coordinates resources to explore collaborative achievements, pioneering outcomes and interdisciplinary applications. Aligned with China's innovation-driven development strategy, it focuses on key areas: fundamental science and technology disciplines; core technologies like AI, big data and industrial software; big data applications in public health and cutting-edge cultural fields such as art innovation. The IAS aims to become a global platform for research sharing and scholarly dialogue.

Statement from the key leaders

Professor Chen Zhi, president of BNBU and fellow of the Hong Kong Academy of Humanities, stated that as a young institution integrating Chinese and Western liberal arts education philosophies, BNBU has achieved notable accomplishments in academic research and talent development through its 19-year evolution. He emphasized that IAS was established to create a comprehensive platform leading technological innovation, advancing cultural prosperity, and serving societal progress. The institute will concentrate on frontier fields such as artificial intelligence and big data, fostering deep integration of fundamental and applied research to transform scientific achievements into robust drivers of economic growth.

Professor Tang Tao, academician of the Chinese Academy of Sciences and director of the BNBU Advanced Research Institute, stated that the institute will benchmark itself against world-leading research institutions to attract and will be benchmarked against other world-renowned institutes of advanced studies in the world. He outlined plans to promote interdisciplinary and cross-sector collaboration, as well as research integrating scientific and cultural perspectives. The institute will focus on cutting-edge scientific challenges such as artificial intelligence, partnering with peer institutions to provide intellectual support for Zhuhai's high-quality development.

NO. 3 FEATURE WRITING

Grandma's Palms Against the Storm

Grandmothers all over the world seem to share an unspoken set of rules. Their watermelon slices always carry a faint garlic scent, because they always use the same knife for fruits and vegetables. They are always slightly hunched, forever mending clothes or scrubbing dishes. Nearly everyone's grandma is clean and fussy. Their worlds shrink to daily vegetable market prices worth repeated mention, yet expand wide enough to have shaped their grandchildren's childhoods.

I grew up eating watermelon at Grandma's magical kitchen that mysteriously mingles with a hint of garlic. My grandma stood no taller than a sunflower stalk, but as strong as an old oak tree. She didn't read a book, she didn't know a word, but her proverbs were my nursery rhymes, her superstitions were my bedtime stories.

I like Grandma's palms best. Grandma's palms were rough, and wrinkled as her face, her skin cracked like dry earth. The backs of her hands were lined and her knuckles were swollen from years of farm work. Dirt lingered under her nails, even after scrubbing. Her hands could thread a needle in dim light and also can light up my childhood.

People who met me often said I was lively and cheerful, but no one knew that as a child, I would always keep my head down, my voice barely louder than a whisper, and I would instinctively shrink back when faced with a crowd, eyes always glued to the floor. I used to be an introverted, timid girl who dared not resist being bullied by others.

But it all changed because of that summer. It was a summer afternoon, cicadas sawed through the thick air, the banyan tree's tendrils swaying in the breeze to cast dappled shadows across the playground. PE teachers organized relay races. My slow pace caused our team to lose, and as a result, the class monitor and a few girls approached me in a threatening manner.

With a sharp crack, the class monitor slapped me across the face. My cheek burned like fire. Humiliation, grief, and shame flooded through me. Yet I kept my eyes lowered, head bowed, afraid to say a word.

Trudging home, I heard Grandma call out my name, as usual, urging me to dinner. My favorite dishes covered the table, but I had no appetite. Her eyes were fixed on my swollen left cheek.

"What happened?" she asked softly.

Without a word, tears rolled down steadily. Seeing me like this, Grandma had already pieced together the gist of what happened.

I never learned how my illiterate grandmother found the principal's office, how many strangers she'd stopped to ask along the way. When I saw her, she was standing in front of the principal's desk, with a loud voice said, "My granddaughter came to school to read, not to be bullied!" Her left foot splayed outward—a habit acquired from a lifetime of farm work.

She ignored the tea the principal offered, whirling toward me. Snatching my hand from the teacher's grip, she rebuked them for failing their duty. Her palm clutched mine, tucking me behind her. Tilting my head, I saw her sun-darkened skin flushed crimson with fury, veins bulging at her temples, and thin blouse dampened by anxious sweat. At that moment, my heart was suddenly full of strength and courage: I knew that no matter what happened, my grandma would always stand in front of me and she would always protect me unconditionally.

On the way home, Grandma clutched my hand, weaving through honking traffic while nagging me to confess if I was bullied again. I lowered my head and silently nodded, noticing her voice gradually becoming hoarse. Suddenly she crouched abruptly, calloused palms cradling my face. Through her reddened, tear-filled eyes, I could see nothing but deep concern for me.

More than a decade passed, her back had curved, and her voice wasn't as strong as it used to be. Yet she still mixed up the knives for cutting fruits and vegetables, she still cooked me all kinds of delicious dishes with those weathered hands. And still, whenever I felt wronged, she would tightly grasp my hand and stand in front of me.

Grandma's hands were maps of survival—they fought storms for me until I learned to weather my own.

Western Sichuan:

A JOURNEY OF HEART AND SIGHT

South Asia's
best getaway

The Winding Mountain Road

At the beginning of our journey, our vehicle wound its way along the mountain road. The road resembles a graceful ribbon coiling around the mountains. As we looked out of the window, the scenery kept changing, with the distant mountains stretching continuously. Driving along this tortuous path, we were filled with anticipation for the journey. Each turn seemed to open a new chapter, and we couldn't wait to uncover the mysterious veil of Western Sichuan.

First Glimpse of Siguniang Mountain

Our journey through Western Sichuan began at the foot of the Siguniang Mountains. Mist veiled the peaks while lush forests cascaded down the slopes like green waves. A weathered wooden footbridge spans the path. My friends and I perched on moss-covered stones, breathing in the earthy perfume of rain-kissed soil. At this moment, it seemed as if time had stopped.

The Snow-capped Mountains

As we ascended in altitude, the snow-capped mountains in the distance gradually came into view. Against the backdrop of the vast blue sky, their snow-white peaks rise imposingly.

“Look! There are the snow-capped mountains we’ve been longing for!” I said excitedly to my friends. Under the sunlight, they shine with a sacred glow. We couldn’t help but feel a profound sense of awe at the extraordinary craftsmanship of nature.

Enchanted by the Vastness: Tagong Grassland's Embrace

Leaving behind the previous wonders, we reached Tagong Grassland.

The moment we stepped onto it, an endless sea of green stunned us into silence.

The lush grassland, dotted with grazing yaks, stretched to meet the clear blue sky. Its sheer vastness made us feel tiny in the face of nature's grandeur.

We grabbed our cameras, snapping frantically—not just to freeze the breathtaking vista, but to record our youth.

PLANNED BEAUTY, UNPLANNED DELIGHTS

After leaving Tagong Grassland, we stopped for a meal and were greeted by a sight: the sky so intensely blue and it seemed painted just for us. The gentle breeze and the peaceful scene made it impossible not to capture the moment with our cameras.

Amidst these peaceful moments, a small puppy caught our attention. It lay curled up before the fluttering prayer flags, completely at ease, as if it belonged to this serene setting. The sight was so charming that it instantly became one of the most memorable parts of our journey. The cute puppy against the backdrop of the endless sky added a unique touch, making our Western Sichuan adventure special.

This charming interlude was a beautiful reminder that even when we plan our travels, life is full of unanticipated wonders. These unexpected delights can appear at any moment, turning ordinary moments into extraordinary memories.

Red Sea Lake: The Finale of an Unforgettable Journey

As we arrived at Red Sea Lake, the final stop of our Western Sichuan adventure, we were greeted by a scene of serene grandeur.

The ground beneath our feet was a marshy expanse. Behind us, the lake stretched out like a shimmering mirror, reflecting the majestic mountains that loomed in the distance.

In a moment of pure elation, we raised our arms high toward the sky, whooping and cheering with unrestrained joy. The lake and mountains witness our love for this place and gratitude for our journey together.

As I gaze at our group photo, I'm filled with warmth. Our Western Sichuan journey, from winding roads to Red Sea Lake, from mist-veiled peaks to grassland expanses, was an unforgettable story. We marveled at nature's wonders, laughed heartily, and grew closer. These memories will be cherished and fuel our future adventures. Western Sichuan will always hold a special place in our hearts.

NO. 5 SPEECH WRITING FOR LI ZIQI

Good morning, everyone. It's my great honor to stand here and deliver a speech. I am Li Ziqi. Or it could say, I'm that crazy girl who takes videos with a phone tied to a tree.

People call me "the fairy in the fairy tale" because of my videos. But the truth is, my daily life is more like a stomped-on jar of kimchi: sour, sticky, and downright chaotic. Those three seconds of me digging the lotus roots required me standing in the river with a minus ten degrees for three hours. The popular bamboo forest clip made me slipped for 37 times shooting it, and the buries stayed on my knees for weeks. Why am I telling you this? Because every time I fall, I learn something new that the lesson can't be googled, only earned. Today, I will bring three sayings to you from the mud.

The first one I want to share is: Turn the flaws into fuel. For me, my poverty wasn't my weakness. In contrast, it became my superpower, rare authenticity. My first viral video was about "Lanzhou Noodles".

Shot with a second-hand phone strapped to a tree. Do you know why the footage shook so badly? Because when the wind blew, the tree shook from the wind, so did I. The tree was trembling, I was shivering and terrified that my phone would fall off and I would have no device to use. This viral hit didn't have studio lighting, just sunlight filtering through leaves. No script, just my dough-kneading hands. No sound effects, only the wind's chorus. Yet viewers adored it, said "This is reality we crave."

The second point is: Slowing down is the best way to deal with anxiety. Many bloggers say the content of the first third seconds of videos directly determines the success of videos. So people only focus on short-term traffic and ignored the quality of the videos. However, I spent 200 days photographing how the rice grows and 180 days waiting for the bead pass to ferment. A lot of people have advised me that I shouldn't do this for a simple reason: People are impatient these days! Well, guess what? Those "painfully slow" videos slapped the doubts right back, 72% retention rate, triple of the platform average. But New York Times called me "anti-tech". Here's a point they missed: Slowing down isn't anti-tech. It's ultimate rebellion of our speed-obsesses age.

The last sentence is: Believe in the potential power of local culture. Regular viewers know that my videos are deeply focus on traditional Chinese culture. Some people ask me: "In the age of globalization, is it still valuable to being stubbornly local?" Let me tell you the Qiang embroidery revival.

NO. 5 SPEECH WRITING

The 3000-years-old craft was dying out, until my videos recorded this technique, the number of apprentices increased 900%. UNESCO reported youth participation in Chinese intangible cultural heritage projects jumped from 12% to 68% since 2010. My videos about harvesting Sichuan pepper led to a 327% increase in young people traveling to the rural areas. It's my honor that my videos can help spread traditional culture. As the African proverb say: "A tree without roots is just a log." Local cultures are our living roots.

NO.5

SPEECH WRITING

So am I a fairy or a kimchi jar? Neither. I think I'm a mirror. From my shaky footage, it proves that you don't need a fancy gear to tell great stories. From my 8 minutes kneading dough video, it means that people crave peaceful life over speed. From the Qiang technique, which was almost dying out, being loved by young people again, it proves we should always believe the power of local culture.

Many people don't believe in me, they said a girl from the countryside could not influence the world with a second-hand phone. But here's a secret that MBA would not teach: When you dance barefoot, the earth itself becomes your stage. Every big tree starts as a seed. Every time you try is a seed. The patience is the water. The local culture is the soil. Plant the seed right now, because the forest needs your tree. That's all, thank you.

NO.7 SELF-REFLECTION: GROWTH IN PR WRITING

Through this semester's PR writing course, I have gained a comprehensive understanding of the core logic and practical skills of public relations writing. I have achieved significant improvements both in the theoretical frameworks and in the ability to apply knowledge in different writing scenarios.

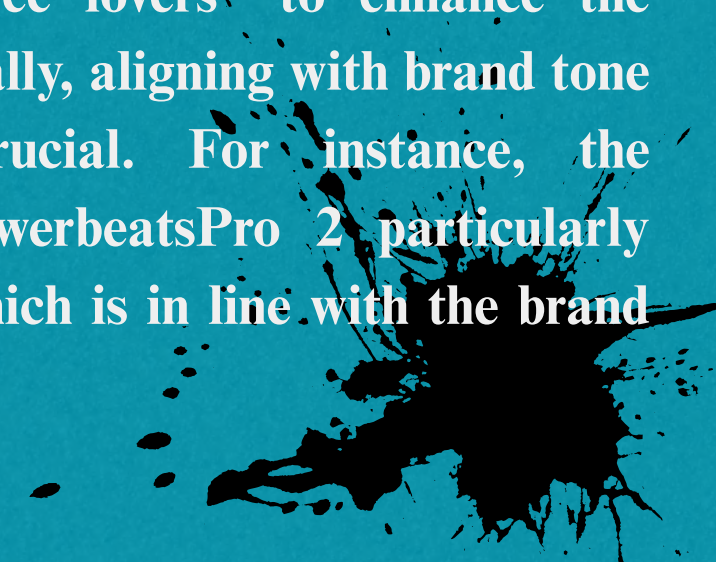

At first, the course clarified the essence of PR writing: Unlike the marketing nature of advertisements and the neutral objectivity of news, public relations writing focuses on persuasion and relationship building and requires strategic expression based on facts. For example, news release writing emphasizes the “inverted pyramid structure” and citation of authoritative sources to ensure accuracy and credibility. Therefore, when completing the media kit for the 20th anniversary of BNBU, we cited the president's speech and cooperation cases to enhance the article's credibility from a third-party perspective. In feature writing, however, the focus is centering narratives around people, using sensory details and conflict narrative, to evoke emotional resonance. For example, when I completed the article “Grandma's Palms Against the Storm”, I took Grandma's palms as the core image. The characters are depicted with details such as “her skin cracked like dry earth” and “snatching my hand from the teacher's grip”, and the plot is advanced through the conflict of “school bullying”.

The writing of the PR Photo story has taught me that photos can convey emotions and stories and enhance the influence of information. Effective visual narrative can make it easier for the audience to understand and remember the core information of the brand. Therefore, I take “a journey of heart and site” as the main thread of the Western Sichuan pr photo story. Through the changes of long shots, medium shots, and close-ups, I guide the audience to experience the psychological path of “anticipation, shock, and surprise”. It embodies the principle that “visual narrative must serve the theme”.

The social media writing deepened my understanding of platform characteristics and user preference. Applying strategies like “attention economy and hook first” and “cultural relevance and trend jacking,” I have learned that public relations writing should focus on eye-catching content and cultural relevance, thereby enhancing brand influence and communication effect. Therefore, when promoting Araica Coffee, I used “wins over coffee lovers” to enhance the dissemination intensity. Additionally, aligning with brand tone when leveraging trends is crucial. For instance, the promotional copy of Beats PowerbeatsPro 2 particularly emphasizes the “sports field”, which is in line with the brand tone of Apple’s promotion.

I always remember that the teacher told us in the first class that the goal of Public Relations Writing is not only to accurately inform but also to persuade and motivate. In the early stage of the course, I often fell into the trap of “excessive literary embellishment”. Excessive use of metaphors in feature writing and neglects the indispensable “clarity and efficiency” in public relations writing. Meanwhile, during the process of writing, the problems in my “Chinglish” have been constantly corrected. The core of PR writing lies in “audience-centered strategic communication”, whether conveying authority in news releases, fostering emotional connections in feature stories, or driving engagement on social media, all efforts must revolve around “building trust between brands and audiences.” This course has not only equipped me with diverse writing techniques but also cultivated a professional mindset of “precise analysis of user needs, skillful narrative crafting, and strict ethical adherence.” In the future, I will anchor my work in “strategy as the framework and content as the substance,” ensuring each article can clearly express the brand value and build a bridge of emotional resonance with the audience. By completing the tasks of News Release, Feature Writing, In-class Speech, PR Photo Story, and Social Media Writing, I have gained the ability to write clearly, concisely, and accurately that is capable of adapting to various demands of writing for a wide range of public relations activities.

LET'S WORK TOGETHER AND CREATE SOMETHING GREAT!
